Importance of sanitation in foodservice industry

The USDA has estimated that costs of foodborne illness are at a staggering $6.9 billion annually¹. Even beyond the costs, consequences to the restaurants are far direr and long lasting. An outbreak due to poor hygiene could result in:

Lawsuits & legal fees

Negative media

Insurance premium increases

Staff absenteeism

Reduced revenue to even closure of business

A restaurant's hygiene depends on a numbers of factors. One of the most important contributing factors is sanitation of various surfaces in the restaurant. Sanitation standards for food contact and non-food contact surfaces are the reduction of contamination by 99.999% and 99.9% respectively.² To achieve this, various chemicals are used at specific concentrations and left on the surface for specific lengths of time.

Why should your operation use a sanitizer compatible towel?

Cotton, rental, and other non-woven towels may deplete sanitizer actives up to 40%³ and not release your sanitizer actives at required levels to the surface potentially putting your business at risk.

Chicopee's Sanitizer Compatible Towels are engineered to deliver your sanitizer actives to the surface helping reduce the risk of a foodborne illness outbreak at your operation.

For more than a century, the name Chicopee has been synonymous with unrivaled expertise in wiping applications and pioneering technologies. Chicopee, a Berry Global brand, is vertically integrated and is the largest non-woven producer in the world. We are ideally suited to engineer a towel to support your critical business requirements in food safety.

At Chicopee, we are committed to supporting your business with products that help improve employee and customer health by helping to reduce the risks of foodborne illness outbreaks and Community Acquired Infections, while improving productivity in a sustainable manner.
